“It’s not that I’m a hero,” said Groenke, describing himself as “just a grunt” in the Marine Corps. “It’s about the history!”

Ken Groenke is a 90-year-old WWII Marine veteran who served in the Central Pacific on Saipan, participated in the invasion of Okinawa and was one of the first Marines to enter the city of Nagasaki after the atomic bomb was dropped.

“Between the Lines: Documenting Found Letters and Living History from World War II

Jennifer Kasbohm recently discovered her father’s Marine trunk containing over 200 letters sent home while in the Pacific during WWII.

Recognizing the significance, Jennifer and her father, Ken, created a documentary called “Between the Lines.”

Ken and Jennifer will discuss the process of making the film along with Ken’s experiences during the war and stories remembered as a result of the letters.

The amazing Trunk with a few of its treasures will be presented and discussed. Sections of the film will be presented and questions are encouraged ”
